

Log Files

Information regarding your use of this website may be recorded by our hosting company in the format of website access /error logs. These log files are used for statistic gathering and fault finding primarily and do not log user names, but Internet addresses. These are stored securely for a temporary time, after which the data is generally destroyed. It is standard industry practice for hosting firms to keep logs for all websites.

Cookies

This website uses cookies (small files containing information, stored locally by your web browser) to create a better experience for visitors to the website. The cookies are always temporary and can be cleared or removed by using your browsers security and cache settings. The type of information stored in these files varies but generally includes things like; a date, a non-descriptive reference or id of some sort, or a particular step in a process stored as a single digit. Our developers endeavour to remove all unnecessary cookies from your system when they are no longer required, however depending on how a visitor enters and exits the website it is not always possible to clean up completely immediately.

Memberships

We collect information from all subscribers to our services.

- Information you submit during account / subscription application process.
- Information you give subsequently (eg: updating a profile)
- Information we get from your use of this website and our services.

We use the collected information to bring you a personalised interface to use our services and to protect our members security. We may also use some of the information to develop new services with the aim of introducing them on this website.

All the information is stored and accessed securely.

Information We Share

We will not divulge our members details to any third-party without legal warrant from appropriate authorities, or the express prior permission of our member(s).